Boggy Trail up North

Pre-Run Bacon Butties Anyone? (Wendolene)

We met at Les Platons, amidst drizzly fog and bacon fumes, Beez Kneez must have thought they were in for a bumper morning. Steptoe called the pack together for some words of wisdom, but I can't remember what they were. Our Hares Muff Diver & Twin Peaks advised us that the chalk had been washed out and that it was slippery, so with that useful information, we headed off to find the trail, which was to lead towards Egypt. However, including the Hares, we all had quite a problem locating an elusive path to the telecoms mast, and which then proved to be steep and very prickly. On on towards the common at Egypt, which provided more prickly gorse bushes, slippery paths and mud, loadsa mud.. (Jump to Back Page)

A great time was had by the tadpoles who splashed in the stream whilst we found the trail heading back up through the woods, and a very marshy run where the earth really does move, but in a sort of blancmangy way and some of us sank up to our ankles in this peat bog. Incidentally we passed the famous red poisonous toadstools called Viagra.

We headed up to the road guided on home by the smell of bacon, and like a two-centre holiday, we enjoyed the hospitality of Bees Kneez before we headed up to St Johns. Then an ice cream van even showed up at Les Platons, word must have got out about a vast crowd in the car park.

Great on downs which were brought out bit by bit, obviously trying to build the excitement, first there was some bread... then chips... then sausages... then sauces, just when most people had used serviettes, the plates appeared, and after people had spread their butter, using chips, the knives appeared, but enjoyable and tasty (Editor, what? You must have been hungry eating a few knives!). Finally, as there had not been any misdemeanours perpetrated by sinners and no birthdays to celebrate, all that remained was to congratulate the Hares Muff Diver and Twin Peaks for a lovely Fun Run.
