Scribe arrives late but blags it – thanks triathlon!

Heaven forbid that the mismanagement should keep a weather eye on big weekend events but the west was a bit of a challenge this week. A neutral northern run would have fitted the bill better. The Jersey Triathlon caused traffic mayhem and despite Steptoe's warning caught a few in the resulting chaos.

Nevertheless, a band of hashers did appear on time in order to hear the GM's ramblings: What happened this day in 1966?: Queen declared World Cup was open. What happened today in 1924 in Paris?: Jacko jibed "you started your paper round". Correct answer: Eric Liddle won 400m Olympics sprint. Poocock jibed "And he also opened worlds first supermarket".

Of course, today is also the Euro Cup Final in which England supporters have a stake and there was much jingoism as the flag of St George was displayed.

But enough of the banter, Wendoline declared the run open and a trail laid in sawdust.

The Off

The trail apparently headed off towards La Moye School and then onto the railway walk where it skirted the golf club to head towards the dunes.

England hopeless supporters

However, the scribe was one of the unlucky ones caught in the traffic and arrived some 10 minutes after the start. Nevertheless, brave soul that he is he set off in pursuit.

No rush

The trail followed by the scribe was actually the on-home and thus somewhat awry. Having lost the trail at the top of La Pulente Hill he set off through the Atalantic Hotel and up onto the dunes by the La Pulente car park, where quite by chance he bumped into Jack who was diligently following a false trail!

Meet-up

This fortuitous encounter enabled the scribe to resume normal service as the pack, on the correct trail was below and about to enter the footpath towards Corbiere.

Dog check

Jacko and the scribe descended the hill and caught up with the pack heading along towards the La Pulente slip. An impromptu check to chew the fat with some cyclists then heading off towards Petit Port along the coastal path. But not before 28 Degrees had red-carded us for a false check. We head on at a pace but turn upwards and head back towards the Atlantic hotel.

A brief check while the pack regroupes then it is on home.

Clubbing it

We head back along the road but there is some confusion at the railway walk. However, we all head along the road eventually and arrive back at the Bowls Club.

Casual Stroll

On-Downs

Back at the club we had been pre-warned by the GM of the lack of decent draught but there was a plentiful supply of Hopping Hare in bottles which was a welcome summer-type ale. The club had provided us with a decent pile of bacon butties which were very welcome.

There was much speculation about the main evening event with hopes high for it coming home (whatever that is meant to mean and it's only the Euro not the bloody World Cup!).

Down-Downs

The RA has lined up a couple of punishments for misdemeanours. Tinky Winky and Walkies are both called up.

Tinkyand Walkies do their stuff

Tinky is punished for absence while walkies seems hapless.

Then it is the turn of the hare who produced a good run albeit hampered by external events.

Hash Ha Ha!

There's a fine line between a numerator and a denominator.

I bought a ceiling fan the other day. Complete waste of money. He just stands there applauding and saying "Ooh, I love how smooth it is."

I met this lovely Dutch girl with inflatable shoes. I gave her a call to ask her out but unfortunately she'd popped her clogs...

I was looking at a job description the other day that I thought was right up my street, till I read that they're after people who can work across multiple teams and are flexible. Well, that's me out, I can't do handstands!
