Wendolene strikes again!

This week it was the turn of serial hare Wendolene to set the run. We all met at Les Laveurs car park at the northern end of the Five Mile Road. There was a very good turn out on a bright, sunny, but still windy, day. Steptoe called for the circle and we had his usual quiz of guessing what happened on this day in bygone years. Unfortunately your humble scribe completely forgot to make any notes and so, dear reader, you have been spared the details. Once Steptoe had stepped aside our hare explained that the trail had been laid in sawdust. She also told us that she had cunningly arranged for the walkers to go one way and the runners to go in the opposite direction but both following the marked trail. This meant that they would eventually meet up more or less at the half way point – and so it came to be.

The walkers headed off south on the dunes just beyond the sea wall before heading inland and past the Frances Le Sueur centre. From there we took one of the tracks leading to the high ground where we reconnected with the runners. After a short catch up we all headed off again. We followed the footpath down and then up again before joining the road leading to Grantez. From there we went down the steep steps and along the main road back to Les Laveurs. Unsurprisingly the runners had beaten us back and were gathered beneath the windswept trees opposite the car park.

Wendolene then laid out a spread of bread, cheese, ham, crudites and pickles – yum-yum! After we had our fill the RA Frisco assembled us for the down downs. Our hare was joined by Captain Poocock who was being punished for taking a fall and spraining his ankle. A lovely morning all round – well done Wendolene.
