A ROYAL AFFAIR

We were out east again this week much to the irritation of the far westerners in the pack, but 'hey-ho' (to quote Illegal). A good number turned up to take part which made for a pleasant change. After Steptoe had finished his by now regular historical quiz Bags-of-it stepped forward to address us. He told us that the trail had been really well laid in sawdust and chalk but an early morning check revealed that the overnight rain had cleared it all away (sad emoji face).

We then split into walkers and runners and off we went. Both groups headed for the St. Martin triangle of small lanes between the church and Hougue Bie. The walkers were guided by a couple of locals namely Twin Peaks and Fuzz, and a very good job they made of it. The runners meanwhile were steered by the hare and consequently had a longer route but all in the same general area.

We all convened again at the Royal Hotel for what is now quite a novelty – a pub On Inn! Bags-of-it had used all his negotiating skills to convince the management to lay on some sausages and chips. A few hashers did their best to upset this arrangement by moaning about the quantities provided and the lack of bread and butter, tut tut.

After the food and drinks had been consumed and the conversation was starting to drag Frisco called upon the hare to be punished for an excellent morning's work. Well done indeed.
