The (not so) Great North Run

Frisco was the hare for this adventure from the North. We gathered at the car park opposite Les Fontaines and awaited him with eager anticipation. Stories were shared of various sightings of our hare on his bike variously distributing handfuls of sawdust or collecting a large amount of baguettes for the 'On Inn' at Chez Pemberton. Eventually he did appear but immediately cycled past, nearly falling off his velo. Not to worry though, a few seconds later he sped into the car park and welcomed us all.

We formed the circle and in the temporary absence of Steptoe and his historical facts we were soon on our way – walkers in one direction, runners in the other.

Whilst the walkers had a very pleasant stroll along the footpaths and lanes of St. John it was a different story for the runners. Almost from the off they were lost in wild countryside with Frisco admitting he had no idea where they were! Steep descents were intermingled with dense undergrowth to produce an interesting alternative to a run.

Eventually both walkers and runners made their various ways to his pad where we were met by his lovely better half Christine. She was however a little put out because Frisco had given her the wrong time for our arrival and she was still in the middle of preparing a lovely spread. Our noble Harriettes stepped into the breach to lend a helping hand and in no time the delicious comestibles were available. They were supplemented by the delicious left overs from Illegal's BBQ the previous evening.

As it was such a lovely morning our hare invited us to take a dip in his pool but in the end it was only himself and Illegal's young guest who took the plunge.

The Down Downs were administered by Deputy Assistant Hash Rev Jacko. To his surprise he had to have the first one for some misdemeanour I don't quite recall – probably involving falling over? There were a total of five birthdays to mark – Frisco, ET, Glutemus Minimus, 28thS, and Sasha (another of Illegal's guests). Frisco was then joined by Software who had not attended his own run due to illness. Finally Christine was 'punished' for her excellent hospitality.

ALL TOGETHER NOW (BUT NOT FOR LONG)
