Wild & Windy West

Originally this week's run was to have been set by Trotsky from St. Ouen's Parish Hall. However she realised that it would clash with the Jersey Marathon and travelling and parking would be a major problem. Step forwards Twin Peaks to the rescue and a relocation to the Watersplash. Despite the start of the day being extremely wet the rain had passed by the time we gathered although the wind was still there to get rid of any cobwebs.

Steptoe called the circle and after his usual historic quiz summoned Twin Peaks who took our orders for the On Inn – a choice of bacon, egg or sausage rolls, talk about being spoiled! She then explained that the trail was very well laid with copious amounts of sawdust and off went the runners.

The walkers set off in the same direction heading north along the sea wall before turning inland to and across the National Trust field of 'Le Noir Pre' (thank heaven for Google Maps!). Their route diverged from the runners' trail at some point as they traversed the back lanes eventually past Les Mielles Golf Club and back to the 'Splash. They were joined by occasional hasher Clare and her lovely little daughter Margot. We all settled down at a sociable communal table to consume our breakfast rolls. The runners turned up after some time and thankfully their choices hadn't been snaffled up.

After our repast we were told to form a circle outside for the down downs. In the absence of Hash Rev, Deputy Assistant Substitute Jacko stepped forward. He said that unfortunately there had been no sinners to punish and so it jut remained for him to call our hare forward to get her just reward for organising such a great run/walk and at such short notice.

Wind blown but dry

He had to borrow Eda's glasses

On your marks...

All the walkers

Grubs up

Well done TP
