Archirondel Activities

ET had summoned us to meet at Archirondel & so we did. Archirondel is believed to mean Rounded Rock & on which the Jersey Round Tower is built. However, this is not the proper name of the Bay which is Le Havre de Fer but I know not why it is so named. Anyway, lesson over for now.

Our GM, now back from foreign lands gave us a very brief intro on a rather cold morning & Wendolene, our substitute hare, gave even briefer instructions merely declaring "On on". The runners set off south before struggling up Le Mont des Landes & La Vieille Charriere. La Rue du Froid Vent lived up to its name before we eventually took the footpath, Le Chemin des Quatre Pieds, to Rozel Woods. However, we were not allowed to head for home but climbed up the valley & along the track from which the arch has disappeared. We had a few opportunities for photos not only of the runners but we also met up with the walkers. The runners set off for St. Catherine's but took the path round the field that led to the many steps down to the road. Here the sexes took different routes back to the car park at Archirondel. The harriettes continued along the road but the harriers decided that the path around the coast was much more attractive. The runners arrived back ahead of the walkers & were able to make inroads into the supply of bottled Liberation Ales. Sadly, I have no information nor photos on our walkers wanderings.

A small alcove in the Archirondel Café had been put aside for the hash & we were served up with bacon rolls. However, it was sensibly decided that the down downs should take place outside. This tradition caused a problem for the café as they obviously were not used to dealing with thirsty hashers as they had run out of supplies of ale! Not to worry as enough liquid was found for small portions to be supplied to our culprits.

First the birthday song was rendered for Trotsky, a down-down was presented to Bags-of-It for his skiing injury as was Walkies for damaging her face in a fall & finally ET was thanked & "rewarded" for a good run. On-on, Steptoe
