A Fond Farewell?

Tinky Towers in the sun

This could be our last BBQ at Tink Towers & the prospects did not look that good on Saturday. However, on Sunday morning the rain clouds had disappeared & light cloud & sunshine was the order of the day so our famous BBQ was safe.

As instructed we assembled at the exotic location of the pumping station on La Rue de Grouville. This led Smuggler that the superior residents had separate channels for their number 1s & 2s. However, while we are about to set off TW received a phone call from Double Tops having got lost on her way to the hash. Has she never been here before?

Our GM welcomed our visitors from Essex, Vicky Vomit & Dr. Doolittle. He had very little to say but both he & Software were serenaded by the pack singing "Grandpa" in honour of them both recently having been presented with grandchildren. The instructions to the pack were short & sharp & the four runners set off. However, how much of the chalk markings & sawdust would be left after the previous day's downpours? Unfortunately very little & the runners therefore missed the turning off the hill (& so did the hare!). Having retraced their steps, the "pack" did pick up the trail but lost it once again – oh dear. However, Steptoe eventually got them back on track & along farm tracks. The problem was that having missed out the early part of the trail the run would be somewhat short so an inventive strategy was adopted. This resulted in traversing rural footpaths & fields. The result was that eventually the steep footpath down to La Rue Mathurin with La Ruelle Mathurin taking the runners back to the cars.

Back at Tinky Towers, our hare was diligently BBQing away having previously laid out meats & cheeses for the Harriers' indulgence whilst Dee & Dr. Doolittle were taking their ease with a cup of tea. Whilst the Hashers were asked to bring their own drinks the generous host had provided Pimms for those that wanted this form of refreshment.

After the gathering had enjoyed the excellent burgers & sausages etc. in the sunshine it was time for the serious business of the reckoning.

First for their "rewards" were Walkies & Jacko to celebrate their birthdays. Our visitors could not be forgotten & Vicky Vomit & Dr. Doolittle did their down-downs justice.

In order to shorten proceedings the RA arranged a collective down-downs for Double Tops for navigational failure, Illegal Immigrant for I what I know not, Steptoe for being a hare & a second for failing to keep the pack on trail & Tinky Winky for hareing the run & for his BBQing skills.

If this is to have been our last visit to Tinky Towers our hosts can congratulate themselves for making it a successful one.

On on, Steptoe
